
cognitive control in social context

Dan Bang^{*1}

¹UCL [London] – United Kingdom

Abstract

Successful social behaviour requires sensitivity to context: an action that is rewarded in one context may be punished in another, and what we think or feel may clash with the required behaviour. I will present my behavioural and neuroimaging work on how people learn and employ context-dependent mappings from private states onto public actions.

*Speaker